Part One: Myths

What is a Myth?

1 Myths are stories that are based on tradition. Some may have factual origins, while others are
2 completely fictional. But myths are more than mere stories and they serve a more profound¹
3 purpose in ancient and modern cultures. Myths are sacred² tales that explain the world and man's 4 experience. Myths are as relevant to us today as they were to the ancients. Myths answer
5 timeless questions and serve as a compass³ to each generation. The myths of lost paradise, for 6 example, give people hope that by living a virtuous⁴ life, they can earn a better life in the 7 hereafter. The myths of a golden age give people hope that there are great leaders who will 8 improve their lives. The hero's quest is a model for young men and women to follow, as they 9 accept adult responsibilities. Some myths simply reassure, such as myths that explain natural 10 phenomena as the actions of gods, rather than arbitrary⁵ events of nature.

²sacred (adjective): holy or belonging to God(s); religious or protected

³serve as a compass (metaphor): act as a guide (in life)

⁴virtuous (adjective): good

⁵arbitrary (adjectives): based on personal preference or whim rather than a logical reason.

Answer the following questions in your exercise book

1. According to the source, what do myths do?
2. Are myths fact or fiction? Use a quotation from the text to support your answer.
3. Which four different kinds of myths are mentioned by the source?
4. What purpose does each of the kinds of myths serve?
5. What features do you think are typical when reading and writing a myth?

Create a checklist using the headers below.

Ten Characteristics of a Myth

1. A myth is a story that is, or was considered, a true explanation of the natural world and how it came to be.
2. Characters are often non-human and are typically gods, goddesses, supernatural beings or mystical “first people.”
3. Setting is typically ancient, or prior to the time when actual records were kept. Myths are typically set in a world very similar to our own, but with supernatural monsters or areas.
4. The plot of a myth may take place between a supernatural world and our present day world. Myths do this to highlight the basic human behaviours that are essential in any setting.
5. Myths possess events that bend or break natural laws. This is often done to magnify the “super-naturalness” of the mythical world.
6. Promotes “Social Action”—myths try to tell people how to act and live. Core values such as individualism, family and community are often instilled in mythical heroes.
7. Myths have sense of mystery, or the unknown.
8. Dualities (or complete opposites such as night/day, good/evil) often play important roles in the plot of a myth.
9. Myths often have an emphasis on language. Mythical heroes are often sophisticated storytellers.
10. Myths are often metaphoric—myths are created to comment or analyse a real world event. Real world questions that myths often attempt to answer are:

- Why are we here?
- Who are we?
- Why are we living? What is our purpose?

RESEARCH ZONE

Choose a popular myth and create a presentation to explore the myth and its meanings to the class. Your presentations should answer these questions:

1. Where is your myth from?
2. Which kind of myth is it?
3. What happens in your myth?
4. What is the moral or lesson in the myth?
5. Are there any modern adaptations or links to your myth that keep it relevant?

Thugine, the Rainbow and the Wandering Boys

1 Far to the west in the deep blue sea there dwells a great serpent
2 named Thugine. His scales are of many shimmering colours. When a
3 rainbow appears in the sky, it is Thugine curving his back and the sun
4 reflecting the colours of his scales.

5 Many years ago, a mob camped close to a sea beach. One
6 morning they all went out to fish and hunt, with the exception of two boys, whom the old men left
7 in charge of the camp. Wander not into the forest lest the wild dogs eat you, or to the beach, where 8 Thugine the serpent is waiting for children who wander alone." This was the parting advice of the 9 old men to the boys.

10 When the men had departed, the boys played about the camp for a while, but they soon grew
11 tired of their games. The day was very hot, and in the distance the boys could hear the dull, deep
12 booming of the surf. Both the boys were longing to go to the beach, but were afraid to speak their 13 desire. At last the elder boy spoke, and said: "The fires of the sun are burning bright to-day, but on 14 the breeze I can feel the cool breath of the sea. Let us go to the beach, and we shall return before 15 the shadow of night has fallen. The men will not know." The other boy hesitated and was afraid, but 16 at last he yielded, and together they wandered hand in hand through the bush.

17 After walking for some time they came to an opening in the trees, and, before their expectant
18 gaze, a wonderful scene unfolded. A golden beach stretched far away until it was lost to view in the 19 dim distance. The cool waves rolled lazily in great green billows from the outer reef, and dashed in 20 a haze of sparkling white foam on the hot sands of the palm-fringed beach. The song of the sea rose
21 in a deep, loud booming, and gradually died away to a low, soft murmuring. The boys were lost in 22 wonder at the beauty of the scene. Never had they seen such an expanse of water sparkling in the 23 sun like the blue sky. Over its rippled surface the shadows of the clouds floated like sails across the 24 sun.

25 Thugine, the serpent, had seen the boys coming from afar, and, while they played on the 26 beach, he swam swiftly and silently to the shore and seized them. When the men arrived at the 27 camp, they discovered the absence of the boys. They searched the bush all through the -night, and 28 at dawn came to the beach. Far from the shore they saw two, black rocks jutting out of the sea. Then 29 they knew that Thugine had taken the wandering boys and turned them into rocks. The men turned 30 their faces again towards the camp; their hearts were heavy and their thoughts were sad.

31 To this day the rocks remain between Double Island Point and Inskip Point, when a rainbow 32 appears in the sky, the old men of the tribe tell the story of the disobedience and punishment of the 33 wandering boys.

 Using the 10 characteristics of a myth as a checklist, do you think this story from Australia's First Peoples is an example of an Australian myth?

ZERO TO HERO

Can you think of any heroes? What qualities make them heroic?

In myths 'Heroes' often meet a certain criteria, these include:

-  Having royal or divine parent(s) – which the hero may or may not know
-  A connection to or ability to interact with the gods
-  If they don't know their parents, they are often adopted by poor but good people
-  doing heroic deeds
-  going on a journey or quest
-  Acts of strength – both physical and moral
-  Superhuman abilities – typically speed, strength or mental acuity.
-  Defeat mythical creatures and monsters
-  Unafraid of death (and may journey to and return from the Underworld)
-  Sometimes seeking glory or fame (or to prove their abilities)
-  For male heroes, deaths that are prophesied or foretold (and at times may seem mystical or mysterious); female heroes' deaths typically involve some form of self-sacrifice – upon their deaths heroes are given mythic status and made immortal in memory (of people or the gods).

Mythic heroes won't fit all of these criteria, but will meet most of them. Can you think of any heroes who fit most of these criteria?

Using the checklist, determine if these mythical characters are heroes or zeroes.	Hero	Zero
Hercules Brave and powerful Hercules is the son of Zeus and Alcmena (a granddaughter of Perseus), Hercules grew up to become a famed warrior. But Zeus's jealous wife, Hera, made him temporarily insane, and he killed his wife and children. As punishment Hercules performed twelve seemingly impossible labours, which have been the subject of countless works of art and drama. Hercules is often depicted wearing a lion skin and wielding a club.
Chimera The Chimera was a ferocious, fire breathing monstrosity that possessed the body and head of a lion with the head of a goat protruding from its back and a snake for a tail. The brief description of the Chimera in the text of The Iliad is the earliest surviving record of the creature. The Chimera is traditionally considered to have been a female, and was said to have given birth to the Sphinx and the Nemean lion. The Chimera was feared and believed to have been an omen for storms, shipwrecks and other natural disasters.
Cerberus Cerberus is Hades' loyal guard dog; he was a massive hound with three heads that guarded the entrance to the underworld. It was said that the beast only had an appetite for living flesh and so would only allow the deceased spirits to pass, while consuming any living mortal who was foolish enough to come near him. It is said that the three heads were meant to symbolize the past, present and future. In other versions of the myth the three heads represent youth, adult hood, and old age.
Odysseus King of Ithaca and a celebrated warrior, Odysseus helped the Greeks triumph in the Trojan War. Afterward he journeyed nearly ten years to return home to Ithaca and his wife Penelope. Along the way Odysseus's courage and cleverness saved him from such monsters as the Cyclops Polyphemus, the Sirens, and Scylla and Charybdis. Back in Ithaca, Odysseus proved his identity to Penelope and once again ruled his homeland. These adventures are told in Homer's epic poem, the Odyssey.
Prometheus Though he was born of the Titan Iapetus by Clymene or Themis, Prometheus foresaw the defeat of the Titans by the Olympian Gods so he allied himself with Zeus. Yet Prometheus eventually angered Zeus by stealing fire and bringing it to mankind. As punishment, Zeus gave Pandora (and, with her, all the evils of the world) to man, and condemned Prometheus to be chained to a rock in the Caucasus Mountains, where his liver was eaten daily by an eagle. According to some versions of the story, Prometheus was eventually freed by Hercules.
Orpheus The son of Calliope and Apollo, Orpheus was a brilliant musician. When he played the lyre, he could charm wild animals and even make rivers stand still. When Orpheus' wife, Eurydice, died, he went down to the underworld to find her. There, his music softened the heart of Hades, who let Orpheus take Eurydice back to the living world on one condition: Orpheus had to walk in front of Eurydice and he couldn't look back at her until they had both left the underworld. But the temptation to see his beloved was too great, and Orpheus looked back. Eurydice vanished forever.
Typhon He was birthed from Gaia (the earth) and Tartarus (the depths of hell). He was said to have been the most ferocious creature ever to roam the earth. Typhon was massive: when he stood upright, his head brushed against the stars. The lower half of his body consisted of two coiled viper tails that constantly were hissing. Instead of fingers, several dragon heads erupted from his hands. He was said to have wings that, when spread, could blot out the sun. Fire flashed from his eyes, striking fear into the heart of any living creature, even the mighty Olympians. Typhon was so mighty, that the only conceivable opponent to defy him was Zeus himself.

THE TROJAN WAR

1 Each of the great cities of Greece sent an army to join the war against the Trojans – each, that
2 is, except for one: The city of Thebes refused to join the war, saying that it had no quarrel with the 3 far away Trojans, and so the Greek King Agamemnon (Aga-mem-non) decided to teach the Thebans
4 a lesson. He ordered his men to destroy their beautiful city and take its treasure – and that is what
5 they did. While the ruined city of Thebes was still burning, the greatest of the Greek warriors shared 6 out the prizes of war.

7 King Agamemnon chose for himself one of the captives - a beautiful young girl called Chryseis
8 (Cry-see-is), a priest's daughter. Agamemnon told her that she must live with him from now on, and 9 be his slave. The girl wept bitterly and begged to be returned to her father, but King Agamemnon
10 had a cruel heart and was unmoved by her tears.

11 Eventually, the Greek ships reached Troy, and the army set up a vast camp on the beach not 12 far from the city. One evening, the good old priest, who was the father of Chryseis, arrived at the 13 camp and asked to meet King Agamemnon and all the greatest of the Greeks.

14 He said, "Oh Agamemnon, leader of men, may the gods grant your wish to destroy the 15 magnificent city of Troy, and may all the Greeks return home safely in their black ships, but grant
16 me this favour; free my daughter and accept in her place a gift of great treasure that I have brought 17 for you."

18 The Greek army cheered the old man for his generous offer, and for the love that he had shown
19 for his daughter, but Agamemnon flew into a rage. "Old man," said he, "let me not find you hanging
20 about our ships, nor coming here again. I will not free your lovely daughter. She shall grow old in my 21 house, in Argos, far from her home. So get out of my sight right now, or it will be the worse for you!"

22 The priest was afraid and swiftly left, but later that evening he knelt down on the shore of the 23 resounding sea and prayed to the immortal god, Apollo of the silver bow. Apollo heard the good old
24 man's prayer for just revenge, and he took up his silver bow and fired arrows into the Greek camp.
25 The arrows of Apollo brought disease, and many of the Greek soldiers fell ill.

DID YOU NOTICE?

1. Why was Agamemnon angry with the Thebans?
2. How did Agamemnon punish the city of Thebes?
3. Why did the 'good old priest' come to see Agamemnon? What did he offer?
4. How did Agamemnon react to 'the good old man's' request? What does this suggest about him?
5. How did the god Apollo respond to the old man's prayer?
6. Myths often contain a lesson for those listening, what might the lesson be in this story?

WHAT|HOW|WHY

How is King Agamemnon portrayed in the story of Chryseis and her father?

26 By far the greatest of the Greek warriors was Achilles (A-kill-ees). He was faster and stronger 27 than any man alive, and also very proud.

28 When Achilles saw the Greek soldiers dying of disease, he called a meeting of all the generals
29 and spoke as follows, "Noble Agamemnon, though you are our leader, I must speak the truth. It was 30 wrong to threaten the priest, a good old man who came to you with a generous offer. The gods are 31 angry with us for what you did, and matters must be put right. You must return the lovely Chryseis 32 to her father."

33 King Agamemnon was surprised to hear such words, as he was not at all used to being told 34 what to do. "Great Achilles," he said, "Brave and strong you may be, but I am king and I shall do what 35 I like and you shall know your place!"

36 To which Achilles replied, "You are too greedy! Why should all the Greeks suffer for your evil
37 ways. I, for one, am not going to follow a leader like you into battle."

38 Now King Agamemnon was absolutely furious but he also understood that something must 39 be done to appease the gods and stop the plague that was destroying his army, and so the next day
40 he ordered a boat to take the young girl back to her father, but he also sent messengers to the tent
41 of Achilles and ordered him hand over his own slave girl. From that moment on the pride of Achilles
42 was so hurt that he refused to take part in the battle for Troy, but instead stayed inside his tent and 43 sulked while the Greeks went out and fought.

✍ EXTENDED WRITING ✍

Chryseis rarely gets to tell her side of the events. Write a description from her point of view of leaving King Agamemnon's camp with her father.

PLANNING POINTS:

- How does Chryseis feel about going home?
- What did she first think when she saw her father asking King Agamemnon to set her free (and his refusal)?
- What can she see, hear, feel, smell, taste as she goes through the Greek Army's camp to the boat waiting to take her home?
- What is she most looking forward to doing once she arrives home?

A year ago.... A month ago.... A day ago.... today

A year ago, the beach was hidden from the world. A month ago, a boat arrived and people found this oasis of beauty. A day ago, more people arrived. Today, I discovered what had happened to my sanctuary.

44 Soon after, the Trojans opened the great doors of their city and their army marched out - like 45 a flock of wild birds swooping back and forth and calling with screeching voices.

46 Now the finest warrior among the Trojans was Prince Hector. He was the brother of Paris, but 47 he was quite different in character. Hector was brave and noble, while Paris loved fine clothes and 48 parties and enjoyed his riches to the full.

49 As they rode out to battle, Hector said to his brother, "Paris, it is for your sake that thousands
50 of brave soldiers will die today. It is only because you ran away with the Greek Queen Helen that this 51 great army has arrived at our gates with the aim of destroying our beautiful city, killing all the men,
52 and carrying off the women and children as slaves. It would be better had you not been born, my 53 brother."

54 When he heard this, Paris felt ashamed, and to make amends he drove his chariot out in front
55 the Trojan army and towards the enemy. In his fiercest voice, Paris called out to the Greeks to send 56 forth their bravest warrior, and to fight him in single combat to decide the war – so that others need 57 not suffer.

58 On the Greek side, King Menelaus (Menel-a-us) hated Paris more than any other man alive, so
59 Menelaus jumped out of his chariot and said, "I will gladly fight Paris, and kill him with my spear 60 which is made of ash wood and tipped with cruel bronze."

61 When Paris heard this, he was so frightened that he coiled back like a man who has seen a 62 snake, and he shrank into the protection of his men. Great laughter arose from the Greek army, and 63 the Trojans were furious with Prince Paris for bringing shame on them. Then Paris began to worry
64 that if the beautiful Helen heard about his running away, she would not love him anymore. So he 65 gathered his courage, and went out once more in front of the army, and again shouted out to the 66 Greeks, "I call on you men to lay your swords and spears on the ground while King Menelaus and I 67 fight one another – hero against hero."

68 Menelaus did not give Paris time to change his mind. He hurled his spear at him so that it broke
69 his shield, but just missed his body. Paris fell backwards, and soon Menelaus was on him, dragging 70 him by the plume of his helmet towards the Greek army. However, the Goddess of Love, Aphrodite, 71 who was fond of Paris, saw what was happening and came to his aid disguised as a cloud. She 72 scooped him into her lovely arms, and whisked him back to his Palace where the fair and fragrant
73 Helen was waiting for him. So the Greeks and the Trojans fought each other in battle.

 DID YOU NOTICE?

1. Who are Paris and Hector? How are they related?
2. Why are the Greeks at war with the Trojans?
3. How does Hector view Paris?
4. Why does Paris decide to challenge King Menelaus?
5. How did Paris survive Menelaus's attack?

According to the characteristics of a mythical hero, do you think Paris is a hero? Use evidence from the text to support your view.

74 Many brave soldiers were killed and wounded on both sides, but as long as Achilles refused to 75 help the Greeks, the Trojans were stronger and drove the Greeks back to their camp. At night, a 76 thousand camp fires glowed upon the plain, and by the light of each fire there sat fifty men while 77 the horses chomped oats and corn beside their chariots and waited for dawn to come.

78 The Greeks begged the great warrior Achilles to come out and fight, but still he refused to join
79 the battle. His best friend, Patroclus, came up with a cunning plan. He secretly put on the 80 magnificent armour of Achilles and went out into the battle, looking exactly like the great hero. He 81 knew that when the Greeks saw him, they would gain courage at the sight of Achilles and fight with 82 redoubled strength, and when the Trojans saw him, they would think that the warrior they most 83 feared had returned, and would lose heart. When the Trojans saw Patroclus dressed like Achilles,
84 Prince Hector flew at him with his spear and killed him. Only then did he discover that it was not 85 Achilles whom he had killed, but Patroclus.

86 When the mighty Achilles heard that his best friend had been killed by Hector, his anger and 87 sorrow were great in equal measure, and he stood up before a meeting of the Greek army and said,
88 "As you know, King Agamemnon has insulted me and I have every right not to fight in this stupid
89 war; but now things have changed. My best friend has been killed by Prince Hector of Troy. It is for 90 the sake of Patroclus, who was dearer to me than any other man, that I will take up the fight and 91 avenge his death."

92 When the Greek army heard this, they all cheered and threw their helmets in the air, for they 93 knew that with Achilles on their side, victory could be theirs.

94 When Prince Hector saw that Achilles stood once again at the head of the Greek army, he 95 knew that there was only one thing for it. He must go out and fight Achilles, and decide the fate of 96 Troy.

97 As Prince Hector was leaving for battle, he went in search of his wife, the lovely Andromache
98 (An-drom-a-kee). He found her walking along the great walls of the city, holding their little baby in 99 her arms. When she saw her husband, Andromache said, "Brave Hector, I beg you; do not go out
100 today to fight Achilles. What will I do when you are gone? Think of your little son. What use is a 101 father to him if he is dead?"

102 Hector replied that he could not refuse to fight, as the Greeks and the Trojans would say he 103 was a coward.

104 He stretched his arms towards his child, but when boy saw the horsehair plume that nodded
105 fiercely from his father's helmet, he was scared and cried, nursing his head into his mother's bosom.

106 His father and mother laughed to see him, and Hector took the helmet from his head and laid 107 it all gleaming upon the ground. Then he took his darling child, kissed him, and dangled him in his 108 arms, praying over him to Zeus, the king of all the gods. "Mighty Zeus," he said, "May one day 109 people say that this child is even braver than his father, and a mightier warrior in battle, so that their 110 praise gladdens the heart of his mother."

111 Hector rode out before the gates of Troy. Achilles, seeing him, started to run with all his might 112 towards Hector, ready to hurl his spear at his hated enemy. Hector jumped from his chariot and 113 stood firm, waiting to meet Achilles, but secretly he thought to himself, "What if I were to lay down

114 my shield and helmet, lean my spear against the wall and go straight up to noble Achilles? What if I
115 were to promise to hand back Helen, who was the cause of all this war, and to let the Greeks take 116 half of all the treasure in the city? Why argue with myself in this way? Were I to go up to him now, 117 he would show me no mercy.”

118 As he pondered, the swift-footed Achilles charged up to him as if he were Aries himself, the 119 plumed God of battle. The bronze tip of Achilles' spear gleamed around him like the rays of the rising
120 sun. Fear came over Hector and he turned and ran, while Achilles darted after him with his utmost
121 speed. As a mountain hawk, the swiftest of birds, swoops down upon some trembling white dove -
122 that is how Achilles made straight for Hector with all his might, while Hector fled around the city
123 walls as fast as his legs could carry him.

124 Achilles chased Hector three times around the walls of Troy until at last Hector turned and 125 fought. First Achilles threw his spear at Hector and missed. Hector then threw his spear at Achilles
126 and hit his shield, but did not break it. They fell on each with clashing bronze swords, and Achilles, 127 for he was the stronger hero, killed Hector.

128 When they heard the sad news, all the women of Troy wept for the loss of their greatest hero,
129 but none wept more than his wife, Andromache.

130 Now that the finest hero of the Trojans was dead, the Greek army thought that they would 131 soon win the war. King Priam of Troy greatly grieved the loss of his bravest son, and feared that the 132 city would soon be defeated, but this is not how things turned out - well, not yet - for Apollo, the 133 winged god of the silver bow, again decided to help the Trojans. One day, in the midst of battle, he 134 came up to Prince Paris and said to him, “Hail Paris, Prince of Troy. Lift up your bow and fire an arrow
135 into the Greek army. I will guide its point into Achilles and kill him.”

136 When he heard this, Prince Paris replied, “Almighty Apollo, I will gladly do as you ask, but will 137 I not just waste my arrow? Everyone knows that when Achilles was a baby, his mother dipped him
138 in the River Styx that runs through the Underworld – and as a result, no weapon can wound him, for 139 the waters of the River Styx make a man immortal.”

140 Apollo replied, “Paris, you speak the truth, but the gods gave the great Achilles a choice – he 141 could lead a short and glorious life, or a long and boring one. He chose glory and so his life must be 142 short.”

143 So Paris dipped his arrow in deadly poison and fired it into the air. It flew in an ark and its 144 poisoned tip drove into Achilles' heel - for when Achilles' mother had dipped him in the river of the 145 underworld, she had held him by his heel, and no water had touched it. Now Achilles fell from his 146 chariot, and soon his great body lay on the ground, dead.

147 And that is the story of how the Greeks and the Trojans fought for nine years without either
148 side gaining victory. Many brave warriors died on either side, and many tears were shed over lost
149 sons and lost friends. Soon I will tell you how the war ended with a cunning trick. And Bertie is 150 reminding me not to forget to tell you about the Wooden Horse.

✍️ EXTENDED WRITING TASK ✍️

You are a resident of New Troy and to mark the 4000th anniversary of the Trojan War the government has decided to erect a statue of the most famous hero. Write a persuasive speech outlining:

- Who the greatest hero of Troy was
- Why they deserve to be remembered as a hero
- Their role in the Trojan War
- Why the other candidates are less worthy than your choice.

THE TROJAN HORSE

- 1 The Trojan Horse is one of history's most famous tricks. The Greeks, led by Odysseus, were laying siege to
- 2 the city of Troy, and the war had dragged on for ten years. The Greeks were fed up with this and built a giant
- 3 (hollow) wooden horse which they left outside the city gates. They then sailed their ships off the coast. The
- 4 Trojans believed the horse was a peace offering and dragged the giant wooden structure into the city. Little
- 5 did they know that hidden inside the horse there were thirty Greek soldiers. The soldiers waited until the
- 6 middle of the night when the citizens of Troy were asleep and crept out of the horse. They slaughtered the
- 7 city guards, threw open the city gates and the rest of the Greek army piled into the city. The army quickly
- 8 captured the city and killed as many Trojans as they could, thus ending the war.

Achilles' Heel

A person or institution's 'Achilles Heel' is their weakness.

In Greek mythology, when Achilles was a baby, it was foretold that he would die young. To prevent his death, his mother Thetis took Achilles to the River Styx, which was supposed to offer powers of invulnerability, and dipped his body into the water. However, as Thetis held Achilles by the heel, his heel was not washed over by the water of the magical river. Achilles grew up to be a man of war who survived many great battles. One day, a poisonous arrow shot at him was lodged in his heel, killing him shortly afterwards.

Sculpted in 1778 by the sculptor Thomas Banks, this marble statue depicts the moment Thetis dipped her son into the river Styx.

The death of Achilles was not mentioned in Homer's Iliad, but appeared in later Greek and Roman poetry and drama concerning events after the Iliad, later in the Trojan War. In the myths surrounding the war, Achilles was said to have died from a heel wound which was the result of an arrow—possibly poisoned—shot by Paris.

Achilles

In Greek mythology, Achilles was a Greek hero of the Trojan War and the central character and greatest warrior of Homer's Iliad. His mother was the immortal Thetis, and his father, the mortal Peleus, was the king of the Myrmidons.

Achilles' most notable feat during the Trojan War was the slaying of the Trojan hero Hector outside the gates of Troy.

The Iliad

The Iliad is an ancient Greek epic poem, traditionally attributed to Homer. Set during the Trojan War, the ten-year siege of the city of Troy (Ilium) by a coalition of Greek states, it tells of the battles and events during the weeks of a quarrel between King Agamemnon and the warrior Achilles.

Did you know?

The use of "Achilles heel" as an expression meaning "area of weakness, vulnerable spot" dates only to 1840, with implied use in Samuel Taylor Coleridge's "Ireland, that vulnerable heel of the British Achilles!" from 1810 (Oxford English Dictionary).

Examples of usage:

The following newspaper headlines from 2018, all used the term 'Achilles Heel'. Can you guess what the stories were about?

- May's Magic Money Forest for the NHS exposes her Achilles Heel
- The Russian Navy's Achilles Heel is Aircraft Carriers

Achilles Tendon

A part of the human body gets its name from the Achilles Myth! The large and prominent tendon of the gastrocnemius and soleus muscles of the calf is called the tendo achilleus or Achilles tendon. This is commonly associated with the site of Achilles' death wound.

Because, But, So

Complete the following sentences:

1. Achilles died during the Trojan war because _____

2. Achilles died during the Trojan war so _____

3. Achilles died during the Trojan war, but _____

Fragments

Identify the fragment sentences by writing an 'F' after them:

- 1. Achilles was a noble warrior
- 2. Because he had been held on the heel
- 3. Despite the fact he was meant to be invincible

In the space below, rewrite the fragment sentences into full sentences:

Write a short paragraph describing a food that you cannot resist. Use the phrase, 'It's my Achilles' Heel' at some point.

ACHILLES

- 1 Great Achilles. Brilliant Achilles, shining Achilles, godlike Achilles... How the epithets¹ pile up. We 2 never called him any of those things; we called him 'the butcher'.
- 3 Swift-footed Achilles. Now there's an interesting one. More than anything else, more than brilliance,
4 more than greatness, his speed defined him. There's a story that he once chased the god Apollo all
5 over the plains of Troy. Cornered at last, Apollo is supposed to have said: 'you can't kill me, I'm 6 immortal².' 'Ah, yes,' Achilles replied. 'But we both know if you weren't immortal, you'd be dead.'
- 7 Nobody was ever allowed the last word; not even a god.

¹Epithet: An adjective used to describe a person's most famous quality – almost like a title.

²Immortal: living forever, never dying

WELCOME TO THE UNDERWORLD

by Michael A. Signal

In Greek mythology, the Underworld is where souls go after death. In this text, Hermes, messenger of the gods, gives readers a tour of the Underworld.

As you read, take notes on the different things that can happen to a soul in the Underworld.

1 Hello and welcome! I'll be your tour guide for the day.
2 No reason to be scared — well, there is some reason to be
3 scared. But don't worry, for I will keep you safe. Your
4 surroundings are, no doubt, frightful. As you look around,
5 however, I am sure you will begin to understand. You see, you
6 are no longer in the land of the living, a world commanded by 7 Zeus. You are now in his brother's kingdom.

8 Ah, it's becoming clear now. I can see the 9 understanding beginning to dawn¹ across your face. You
10 have passed on to the land of souls: the realm² of Hades.³ I
11 am here to welcome you into this realm and to guide you
12 through it. At the end of the tour, I will escort you back to the land of the living. Welcome... to the 13 Underworld.

14 Well, we're not exactly in the Underworld, not yet. First, we have to cross this river, which acts
15 as a boundary between the living and the dead. It is called the River Styx, and we can't cross it alone.
16 We have to wait here for the ferry.

17 Do you have the fare? Of course, you don't. In this world, there's a fare you have to pay in order
18 to travel across the river. Typically, loved ones place coins in the mouth of the dead, knowing they 19 will need the money to pay Charon, the ferryman of Hades. I have a coin that will allow us to board
20 the ferry. And look, here is Charon now, wearing his long tattered⁴ robe and carrying his ferryman's
21 pole. We must give the coin to Charon before we can board his vessel.

22 Look there! See that figure in the distance? Yes, those are three heads. We are nearing the 23 gates of Hades, guarded by a fierce hound named Cerberus. Cerberus is a massive, fearsome beast.
24 I am sure you have heard tales of him, but seeing him in person can be intimidating.⁵ He is not just a
25 huge dog with three heads but a mixture of the Underworld's most monstrous creatures. You can
26 see now that he has the tail of a serpent and the heads of many snakes growing from his back. I
27 assure you, Cerberus will not harm⁶ anyone unless they try to escape Hades. You see, Cerberus
28 ensures that none but the souls of the dead enter the Underworld — unless accompanied by me! He 29 also guards the gate so that no one can escape back into the world of the living.

30 Because Cerberus has allowed us safe passage through the gate, we are now in Hades. The 31 Underworld is divided into three parts. First, there is paradise: the Elysian Fields. People earn the 32 right to spend eternity⁷ in the Elysian Fields through heroic feats and virtuous⁸ deeds on earth.
33 Many mortals strive to get here but, alas, only a small number of souls earn the right to spend 34 eternity in paradise. Next, there are the Asphodel Meadows. It is not a land of pure delight, like the 35 Elysian Fields. This is where people who have lived good but unremarkable lives come to stay after 36 those lives have ended. And finally... let us move just a bit closer to the edge here. Look down. That

37 is the pit of Tartarus. You should never want a closer look than this. Tartarus is a land of pain, 38 despair, and punishment. It is reserved for only the most despicable⁹ people who have spent their 39 lives as scoundrels, thieves, and murderers.

40 Who determines who is good and who deserves to be sent to Tartarus? Every Greek knows 41 that Zeus reigns¹⁰ over all other gods. He presides over them and the living from his home on Mt.
42 Olympus. And his brother, Poseidon, rules the oceans. Well, there is another powerful god who rules
43 the dead here in the Underworld. Hades, brother of Zeus and Poseidon, is god of the dead. He has 44 rule over every departed soul.

45 For those who are deserving, Hades will reward them in the Elysian Fields. But Hades will 46 eternally punish those who cross him or anger the gods. Sisyphus and Tantalus were crafty,
47 deceitful kings who were sent to Tartarus for the rest of time. Sisyphus was sentenced to push a
48 heavy boulder up a steep hill forever. Every time he is close to reaching the top of the hill, it rolls
49 back down, and he must start the process over again. Tantalus was sentenced to stand in a pool of 50 water that sits beneath a fruit tree. No matter how hungry or thirsty he gets, he will never be able to 51 reach for the fruit or the water. Imagine how *tantalizing*¹¹ that must be!

52 Sorry, that was a bad joke. This is serious. Don't worry, for most humans have not been so vile 53 and wretched in life as Sisyphus and Tantalus. Few should fear this punishment... as long as they 54 obey the laws of Hades.

55 It is my job to know these things and to share with you this knowledge. I am Hermes,
56 messenger of the gods and son of Zeus. I am also tasked with guiding souls to the Underworld. I
57 hope that I have given you useful information and have answered any questions that you might have 58 about the realm of the dead. Feel free to stop by again! After all, the Greeks believed that this would 59 be their home for all eternity — it's not as if we are going anywhere!

Comprehension Questions:

1. Why does the narrator think that you might be afraid?
2. How does a person enter the Underworld?
3. What determines where a departed soul goes in the Underworld?
4. What is Hades' job?
5. What does Hermes do in the Underworld?

For the following questions, choose the best answer or respond in complete sentences.

1. PART A: Which sentence describes the main idea of the text?
 - A. The Underworld is a terrifying place that people spend their lives attempting to avoid.
 - B. Hades and the Underworld are unfairly judged by the living, despite offering the dead a pleasant afterlife.
 - C. The Underworld is a complex place, where Hades decides how the dead will spend their afterlife.
 - D. Hades makes it extremely difficult for people to travel to the Underworld, as he wishes to keep his territory a secret.

2. PART B: Which detail from the text best supports the answer to Part A?
 - A. "You see, you are no longer in the land of the living, a world commanded by Zeus. You are now in his brother's kingdom." (Paragraph 1)
 - B. "You see, Cerberus ensures that none but the souls of the dead enter the Underworld — unless accompanied by me!" (Paragraph 5)
 - C. "That is the pit of Tartarus. You should never want a closer look than this. Tartarus is a land of pain, despair, and punishment." (Paragraph 6)
 - D. "For those who are deserving, Hades will reward them in the Elysian Fields. But Hades will eternally punish those who cross him or anger the gods." (Paragraph 8)

3. PART A: Which of the following describes Hermes' attitude towards the person he is taking on a tour of the Underworld?
 - A. Hermes is helpful and comforting towards the person on the tour, as he shows them the Underworld and tells them about it.
 - B. Hermes is apologetic towards the person on the tour for showing them the frightening sights of monsters and Hades.
 - C. Hermes is irritated towards the person on the tour, as it is clear that the individual is afraid of the Underworld.
 - D. Hermes is snobby towards the person on the tour, as he knows so much more about the Underworld than the other person.

4. PART B: Which quote from the text best supports the answer to Part A?
 - A. "I am here to welcome you into this realm and to guide you through it. At the end of the tour, I will escort you back to the land of the living." (Paragraph 2)
 - B. "Cerberus is a massive, fearsome beast. I am sure you have heard tales of him, but seeing him in person can be intimidating." (Paragraph 5)

 - D. "No matter how hungry or thirsty he gets, he will never be able to reach for the fruit or the water. Imagine how tantalizing that must be!" (Paragraph 8)

5. How does a person's life in Earth affect their experiences in the Underworld?

ORPHEUS AND THE UNDERWORLD

1 Orpheus travelled all the way from Pimpleia to Cape Tainaron in the Peloponnese, the 2 southernmost point of all Greece,* where could be found a cave that formed one of the entrances to 3 the underworld.

4 The path from the cape sloped down, after many mazy turns, to the main gate guarded by 5 Cerberus – the slavering, shuddering, slobbering three-headed dog, offspring[†] of the primordial
6 monsters Echidna and Typhon.

7 At the sight of a living mortal daring to enter the halls of hell, Cerberus wagged his serpent tail
8 and drooled in anticipation. Only the dead could pass him, and in order to dwell in peace in the 9 Meadow of Asphodel[‡] they would know to bring with them a piece of food with which to placate
10 him. Orpheus had no sop for Cerberus other than his art. Inwardly quaking but outwardly assured, 11 he brushed the strings of the golden lyre with his fingers and began to sing.

12 At the sound of the song, Cerberus – who had bunched himself up ready to bound forward and 13 savage this presumptuous mortal – gave a whining gulp and froze in his tracks. His huge eyes
14 rounded and he began to pant with pleasure and an inner joy that was entirely new to him. He 15 dropped down on his haunches and curled himself on the cold stone of the gateway, like a
16 huntsman's favourite hound dreaming by the fire after a long day in the field. Orpheus's song slowed
17 into a gentle lullaby. Cerberus's six ears flopped down, his six eyes closed, his three tongues passed 18 across his chops with a great slap and his three massive heads dropped into a deep and happy sleep.
19 Even the snake of his tail drooped in peaceful slumber.

20 Orpheus climbed over the snoring form and, still humming his lullaby, he headed along the 21 cold dark passageway until his progress was blocked by the black waters of the River Styx. Charon 22 the ferryman poled his way towards him from the further bank where he had just deposited a new 23 soul. He stretched out his hand for payment but quickly withdrew it when he saw that the young 24 man standing before him was alive.

25 'Hence! Avaunt!' cried Charon in a hoarse whisper.[§]

26 In reply Orpheus strummed his lyre and began a new song, a song praising the overlooked 27 profession of ferrymen, glorifying the unrecognised diligence and industry of one ferryman in 28 particular – Charon, the great Charon, whose central role in the vast mystery of life and death should 29 be celebrated the world over.

30 Never had Charon's ferry skimmed the cold waters of the Styx with such alacrity^{}. Never 31 before had Charon, his skiff now beached, put an arm round a fare and helped them gently to 32 disembark. And for sure, never, not in all eternity, has such a stupid, fatuous smile played over the 33 ferryman's habitually gaunt and unrelenting features. He stood supporting himself on his pole, his 34 adoring gaze fixed on the person of Orpheus who, with a final wave and strum of the lyre was soon
35 swallowed up by the darkness of the passageways that led to the palace of Hades and Persephone.

§ Charon liked to use old-fashioned words like 'Avaunt', 'Nay' and 'Forsooth'. He believed they enhanced his dignity.

 Alacrity (noun): brisk and cheerful readiness/eagerness (pace)

36 On entering the palace's great hall, Orpheus found himself facing the three Judges of the 37 Underworld, Minos, Rhadamanthus and Aeacus, enthroned in a grim semi-circle. The light of 38 Orpheus's living spirit dazzled their eyes.

39 'Sacrilège! Sacrilège!'^{††}

40 'How dare the living invade the realm of the dead?'

41 'Summon Thanatos, lord of death, to suck the insolent soul from his body!'

42 Orpheus took up his lyre and before the last command could be obeyed, the three judges were 43 smiling, nodding their head and tapping their sandaled toes in time to the intoxicating strains.

44 Their retinue of ghoulish servants, sentries and attendants had not heard music for so long
45 that they could not remember how to respond to it. Some clutched at the air as if the sounds they 46 heard were butterflies that could be caught in their hands. Some clapped, clumsily at first, but soon
47 in time to the beat of the lyre's chords. An awkward shuffle turned into a rhythmic stamp that 48 became a frenzied dance. Within minutes the whole chamber was alive and echoing with singing, 49 dancing and cried of joy and laughter.

50 'What is the meaning of this?'

51 At the sight of Hades, King of the Underworld himself, and his pale consort Persephone, the 52 hall fell into an instant and guilty silence. As in a game of musical chairs, they froze to a halt with 53 thuds and skids. Only Orpheus appeared unmoved.

54 Hades curled a beckoning finger. 'If you wish to avoid an eternal punishment more excruciating
55 than those of Ixion, Sisyphus and Tantalus combined, you had better explain yourself, mortal. What 56 possible excuse could you have for this indecent display?'

57 'Not an excuse, sir, but a reason. The best and only reason.'

58 'A pert reply. And what is this reason?'

59 'Love.'

60 Hades replied with the barrage of bleak barks that was the closest he came to laughing.

61 'My wife Eurydice is here. I must have her back.'

62 'Must?' Persephone stared at him in disbelief. 'You dare use such a word?'

63 'My father Apollo –'

64 'We do no favours for Olympians,' said Hades. 'You are mortal and you have trespassed into 65 the realm of the dead. That is all we need to know.'

66 'Perhaps my music may change your mind.'

67 'Music! We are immune to its charms here.'

^{††} Sacrilège (noun): An action that breaks holy rules or laws (going against what god(s) has decided is right)

68 'I tamed Cerberus. I charmed Charon. I bewitched the Judges of the Underworld and their 69 retinue. Are you perhaps afraid that my songs might enchant you also?'

70 Queen Persephone whispered briefly in her husband's ear.

71 Hades nodded. 'Fetch Eurydice!' he commanded. 'One song,' he said to Orpheus. 'You may 72 sing one song. If it fails to delight, the relentless agony of your torture will be the talk and terror of 73 the cosmos till the end of time. If your music moves us, well – we will allow you and your woman to 74 return to the world above.'

75 When Eurydice's spirit floated into the hall and saw Orpheus standing so boldly before the King
76 and Queen of the Dead, she let out a great cry of joy and wonder. Orpheus saw the shimmering form 77 of her shade and called out to her.

78 'Yes, yes!' said Hades, testily. 'Most affecting. Now. Your song.'

79 Orpheus took up his lyre and gave a deep breath. Never had an artist asked more of their art.

80 The moment his hands touched the strings everyone present knew that they were going to 81 hear something entirely new. Nimbly, Orpheus's fingertips flew up and down the strings, causing a 82 cascade of trilling notes so quick and pure that everyone caught their breath. And now, out of the 83 golden ripple emerged the voice. It asked everyone to think of love. Surely, even here, in the dark
84 caverns of death, love still sat in their souls? Could they remember the first time they felt the 85 sweeping rush of love? Love came to peasants, kings and even gods. Love made all equal. Love 86 deified, yet love levelled.

87 Persephone's hand tightened around Hades' wrist as she recalled the day his chariot erupted
88 into the meadow where she had been gathering flowers. Hades found himself thinking of the 89 bargain he had struck with Demeter, Persephone's mother, allowing him access to his beloved for 90 six whole months in every year.

91 Persephone turned to look at her husband, the man who had taken her by force but kept her
92 by his steadfast love. Only she understood his dark moods and the honest passions that boiled
93 within. He returned her gaze. Could that be a tear she saw welling up in his eye?

94 Orpheus reached the climax of his song to Eros. It wound its way along the passageways and 95 through the chambers, galleries and hallways of hell, binding all who heard it – the servants of Hades,
96 the emissaries of death and the souls of the departed – in a spell that took them, for as long as the 97 music played in their ears, far away from the remorseless miseries of their endless captivity and into 98 a kingdom of light and love.

99 'Your wish is granted,' boomed Hades huskily as the last notes faded away. 'Your wife may 100 depart.'

101 At his words Eurydice's shade took on the substance and form of quick and breathing life. She 102 ran into her husband's arms and they held each other tight. But a frown was forming on Hades' brow.
103 The loss of just one dead soul tormented him. When it came to the spirits doomed to spend eternity
104 in his kingdom, he was a hoarder, a miser of the meanest kind.

105 'Wait!'

106 The moment Eurydice had returned to flesh and blood, Orpheus had stopped playing and 107 singing and the powerful spell of the music began to weaken its hold. It was a memory, a keen and 108 a beautiful one, but the transcendent mood it engendered, like all the keenest pleasures, vanished
109 like steam the moment the closing notes died away. Hades now regretted bitterly that while 110 imprisoned in the bewitching coils of Orpheus's song he could have been so weak as to agree to 111 Eurydice's release. How foolish he had been to give his word in front of so many witnesses. He leaned 112 across for a whispered consultation with Persephone. Nodding, with a small smile of triumph, he 113 kissed her cheek and pointed a finger at Orpheus.

114 'Let go of the woman. Turn and leave us.'

115 'But you said...'

116 'She will follow. As you make your way to the upper world, she will remain ten paces behind.
117 But if you turn round to look at her, if you cast so much as the briefest backward glance in her 118 direction, you will lose her. Trust, Orpheus the musician. You must show that you honour us and 119 have faith in our word. Now go.'

120 Orpheus took Eurydice's face in his hands, kissed her cheek and turned to leave.

121 'Remember!' Persephone called after him. 'Look back for just one instant and she will be ours.
122 No matter how many times you return, and how many songs you sing, you will have lost her for ever.'

123 'I won't be far behind. Have faith!' said Eurydice.

124 Orpheus reached the door that led to life and freedom.

125 'Faith!' replied Orpheus, his eyes fixed resolutely ahead of him.

126 And so he began to make his way along the slowly rising stone corridor and passageways.
127 Hundreds of flitting souls acknowledged him and breathed messages of good luck as he passed.
128 Some alarmed him by begging to be taken to the upper world with him, but Orpheus waved them
129 away and kept resolutely to his course, upwards and ever upwards. Gates and doors opened 130 mysteriously before him as he went.

131 To encourage Eurydice, but mostly to reassure himself, he called out continuously.

132 'Still there, my darling?'

133 'Still there.'

134 'Not tiring?'

135 'Always ten paces behind. Trust me.'

136 'So close now.'

137 Indeed, over the last to hundred or so paces Orpheus had become aware of a cool breeze
138 fanning his face and fresh air filling his nostrils. Now he saw light ahead. Not the underworld's light
139 of rush torches, pitch lamps and burning oil, but the pure light of living day. He quickened his step
140 and pressed forward. SO close, so frantically close! In just fifteen, fourteen, twelve steps they would 141 be free, free to live their lives again as husband and wife. Free to have children, to travel the world

142 together. Oh, the places they would visit. The wonders they would see. The songs and poetry and 143 music he would compose.

144 The mouth of the cave opened wide as Orpheus strode on with joy and triumph in his heart.
145 One more step – out of the shadows and into the light.

146 He had done it! He was out in the world, the sun was warming his face and its light was dazzling
147 his eyes. Ten more steps forward to be sure, and now he could turn and take his beloved in his arms.

148 But no! No, no, no and no!

149 Orpheus had not known it, but his last twenty or so steps had accelerated into a run. Eurydice
150 had quickened her own pace to try to match his, but when he turned round she was still too far 151 behind, still in shadow, still in the realm of the dead.

152 Her eyes, filled with horror and fear, caught his for a second before the light inside her seemed 153 to die and she was pulled back into the darkness.

154 With a cry of anguish Orpheus ran into the cave but she was flying away from him at 155 tremendous speed, no longer flesh and blood but an immaterial spirit once more. Her unhappy cries
156 echoed as Orpheus ran blindly into the blackness after her. The doors and gateways that had opened
157 to let them leave now slammed shut in his face. He beat his fists against them until they bled, but to 158 no avail. He could no longer hear her cries of despair, only his own.

159 If he had waited just two blinks of an eye before turning, they would have been united and free.
160 Just two heartbeats.

The HERO'S JOURNEY

IN 1949, American mythological researcher Joseph Campbell wrote a famous book entitled The Hero with a Thousand Faces in which he identified common patterns running through hero myths and stories from around the world. Campbell outlines several basic stages that almost every hero-quest goes through (no matter the culture of origin) which he called "the monomyth."

1. The Ordinary World – The hero exists in a world that is considered ordinary or uneventful by its inhabitants. The hero is often considered odd by those in the ordinary world and possesses some ability or characteristic that makes them feel out of place.
2. The Call to Adventure – The hero is called away from the ordinary world— usually by discovery, event, or danger. They may be reluctant to leave the ordinary world but ultimately accept their destiny in the end.
3. Refusal of the Quest – During the Call to Adventure, the hero is given a quest which only they can complete. They are given the choice to accept or deny it but refusing the quest only brings trouble.
4. Accepting the Call – Once the adventure is accepted, the hero advances into the next stage of their journey.
5. Entering the Unknown – The hero enters an unknown world— sometimes filled with supernatural creatures, breath-taking sights, and the constant threat of death. Unlike the hero's home, this outside world has its own rules and they learn quickly to respect these rules as they are tested again and again.
6. Supernatural Aid – A hero is almost always started on their journey by a character who has mastered the laws of the outside world and shares this wisdom— it is something the hero needs to succeed.
7. Talisman – This special item will assist the hero on their quest.
8. Allies/Helpers - Every hero needs allies and helpers; without these the hero would fail.
9. Tests and the Supreme Ordeal – A series of tests and obstacles will strengthen the hero and prepare them for the final showdown.
10. Reward and the Journey Home – A reward is given to the hero for passing the Supreme Ordeal and for their endurance and strength. After they obtain the reward, all that is left is for the hero to return home.
11. Master of Two Worlds/Restoring the World – Success on the hero's quest is life-changing. By achieving victory, they have changed their original world. The hero has also grown in spirit and strength.

THESEUS AND THE MINOTAUR

by E2BN.org

In ancient Greece, people told myths to explain the ways of the world. Myths often portrayed brave heroes and vicious monsters. The ancient Greeks also believed in powerful gods who watched over Earth and intervened when they saw fit. In this particular myth, a prince from Greece's capital city of Athens travels by sea to another city, Crete, in order to fight a monster.

As you read, take notes on how Theseus' actions and characteristics help drive the plot.

1 King Minos of Crete was a powerful man, feared by
2 the rulers of the lands around him. When he demanded
3 goods or men for his great armies, they felt they had to 4 agree. When he demanded they send tributes⁹ to honour
5 him, they sent them without question. It was the only way
6 they could stop him going to war with them. But his 7 demands on Athens became too much for them to bear.

8 King Minos had a great palace built for himself. Inside
9 this palace, Minos had built a giant maze, a labyrinth, and, at the centre of the maze, he kept a terrifying creature
10 – the Minotaur. Now this was no ordinary animal; it was a monster, half man and half bull.

11 It was powerful and savage,¹⁰ and it loved to eat the flesh of the humans who had been shut into the 12 labyrinth by King Minos. They would wander through the maze, completely lost, until at last they came face to 13 face with the Minotaur. Not a great way to die, really.

14 As for Athens, Minos demanded that every year King Aegeus of Athens send him seven young men and 15 seven young women.

16 “Why do we send these young people to Crete every year?” Theseus, the King’s son, asked his father. “And 17 why is it that none of them ever return?”

18 “Because if we did not send them, Minos would wage war on us and it is a war that we would not win,” said
19 King Aegeus. “And they do not return because they do not go to Crete as slaves. They go as food for the Minotaur.”

20 “Father, this is terrible,” shouted Theseus, “we cannot let this go on. We cannot sacrifice any more of our 21 young citizens to this tyrant. When it is time to send the next tribute, I will go as one of them and I vow that it is 22 the last time the Minotaur will be fed with the flesh of any of our people.”

23 Try as he might, his father could not persuade him to change his mind. Aegeus reminded him that every 24 year, other young men had sworn to slay this terrible beast and they had never been seen again.

25 Theseus insisted that he understood the dangers but would succeed. “I will return to you, father,” cried
26 Theseus, as the ship left the harbour wall, “and you will be proud of your son.”

27 “Then I wish you good luck, my son,” cried his father, “I shall keep watch for you every day. If you are 28 successful, take down these black sails and replace them with white ones. That way I will know you are coming 29 home safe to me.”

30 As the ship docked in Crete, King Minos himself came down to inspect the prisoners from Athens. He 31 enjoyed the chance to taunt the Athenians and to humiliate¹¹ them even further.

⁹ In this context, a tribute is a payment made by one state or ruler to another, especially as the price of peace, security, protection or to recognize authority

¹⁰ Savage (adjective) : fierce, violent, or uncontrolled

¹¹ Humiliate (verb) : to make someone feel ashamed or foolish

32 "Is this all your king has to offer this year?" he jeered. "Such puny¹² creatures. Hardly even a snack for the 33 mighty creature within the labyrinth. Anyway, let's get on with it. I am not a hard-hearted man, so I will let you 34 choose which one goes first into the Minotaur's den. Who is it to be?"

35 Theseus stepped forward.

36 "I will go first. I am Theseus, Prince of Athens and I do not fear what is within the walls of your maze."

37 "Those are brave words for one so young and so feeble.¹³ But the Minotaur will soon have you between its 38 horns. Guards, open the labyrinth and send him in."

39 Standing behind the king, listening, was his daughter, Ariadne. From the moment she set eyes on Theseus,
40 Ariadne fell in love with him. As she listened to her father goading¹⁴ and taunting the young prince, she decided 41 that she would help him. As he entered the labyrinth and the guards walked away, she called softly to him.

42 "Theseus, take this," she whispered. "Even if you kill the Minotaur, you will never find your way out again."

43 She threw him a great ball of string and he tied one end of it to the entrance. He smiled at her, turned and 44 began to make his way into the maze, the string playing out behind him as he went.

45 Theseus walked carefully through the dark, foul-smelling passages of the labyrinth, expecting at any 46 moment to come face-to-face with the creature. He did not have long to wait. Turning a corner, with his hands
47 held out in front of him feeling his way, he suddenly touched what felt like a huge bony horn.

48 In an instant his world turned upside-down, quite literally. He was picked up between the Minotaur's horns
49 and tossed high into the air. When he landed on the hard cold stone, he felt the animal's huge hooves come down
50 on his chest. Every last breath seemed to be knocked out of him and he struggled to stay alive in the darkness.

51 But Theseus was no ordinary man. He was the son of the King, he was brave and he was stubborn. As the 52 Minotaur bellowed¹⁵ in his ear and grabbed at him with its hairy arms, Theseus found a strength which he did not 53 know he possessed.

54 He grabbed the animal's huge horns, and kept on twisting the great head from side to side. As the animal
55 grew weak, Theseus gave one almighty tug on the head, turning it almost right around. The creature's neck
56 snapped, it gurgled its last breath and fell to the floor with an enormous thud.

57 It was over, he had done it. The Minotaur was dead. All he had to do was make his way out of... and then he 58 realised the awful truth. In the struggle, he had let go of the string, his lifeline. Theseus felt all over the floor in the 59 pitch darkness and kept thinking he had found it, only to realise that all he had was a long wiry hair from the 60 Minotaur.

61 Despair¹⁶ set in and Theseus wondered if this was where his life would end, down in the dark, all alone, next
62 to the stinking body. Then, his hand brushed a piece of string and, with a whoop of delight, he knew he had found
63 the thread which would lead him back out. As he neared the entrance of the labyrinth, the darkness began to fade
64 and he made out the figure of Ariadne, waiting for his return.

65 "You must take me back to Athens with you," she cried, "My father will kill me when he finds out that I have 66 helped you."

67 "But of course you must come with us," said Theseus, "it would be cruel to leave you here." Quickly and 68 quietly, they unfurled¹⁷ the great black sails of their ship and headed for home.

¹² Puny (adjective) : small and weak

¹³ Feeble (adjective) : lacking physical strength, especially due to age or illness

¹⁴ Goad (verb) : to provoke or annoy in order to create a reaction

¹⁵ Bellow (verb) : to shout in a loud or deep voice

¹⁶ Despair (noun) : a feeling that everything is wrong and nothing will get better

¹⁷ Unfurl (verb) to open something, like a flag, so that it is spread out

69 "I cannot believe how my life has changed," said Ariadne, as they sailed across the calm seas towards 70 Athens. "To think that I am free of my cruel father and that I will soon be married to a great prince."

71 "Married?" said Theseus, "Oh, yes, that will be... er... wonderful." But in truth, Theseus did not really find 72 her attractive.

73 So, when their ship docked at an island on their way home, to collect fresh water, Theseus sent Ariadne off
 74 to find bread and fruit. The moment she was gone, he set sail and left her on the island. Now, you might think that 75 this was a bad way to reward someone who had helped him and had saved him from certain death.

76 The Gods clearly thought the same thing, for they had a further horror in store for him, as a punishment for 77 his ungrateful treatment of the young girl.

78 In his haste¹⁸ to get away, Theseus forgot to change his sails to white. King Aegeus, waiting on the headland, 79 saw the ship approaching with its black sails flying in the wind.

80 "My son has failed and he is dead," he cried. And in despair, he flung himself from the cliff into the raging
 81 waters below. From that day on, the sea was named in memory of Theseus' father, and to this day, it is known as 82 the Aegean Sea.

Part Two: Legends

Legends

1 A legend (/ˈleɪənd/) is a story about human events or actions that has not been proved nor
2 documented in real history. Legends are retold as if they are real events and were believed to be
3 historical accounts. They usually tell stories about things that could be possible, so both the 4 storyteller and the audience may believe they are true. Its meaning stems from the Medieval Latin
5 term legenda, meaning “things to be read.” and from the Latin legendus.

6 The details in legends are altered and adapted over time so that they stay interesting for 7 audiences—for instance, the legend of the Philosopher’s Stone (a magical stone that can make a
8 person immortal and turn metals into gold) can be found in literature in the Middle Ages to the 9 modern day Harry Potter series. Legends don’t claim to be exact retellings of events, so they are 10 neither wholly believed nor wholly doubted by the audience or the author.

11 Sometimes, it’s hard to say whether a legend is fiction or nonfiction—the truth behind it can 12 be unclear. For example, the legends of the Loch Ness Monster and Bigfoot are based on real
13 sightings, but their existence remains unproved today. Conversely, an urban legend is a fictional 14 story in popular culture that is known to be false; for example, a rumour passed on year after year to 15 each new group of freshmen about an old janitor who used to murder students at the local high 16 school.

17 As stories, mankind has and always will love legends—they are an intriguing form of 18 storytelling because we want to believe that they are true. They are an essential part of oral and 19 written folklore; they are found in folktales from all cultures. It is part of our nature to share 20 interesting and significant tales with friends and future generations so that they can be recorded and 21 remembered. As much as people like to tell stories, they like to exaggerate even more, which is why 22 legends are so timeless—their facts have been embellished and changed so many times that the 23 truth becomes a mystery that still might need to be solved, and that makes them particularly 24 intriguing. So long as we continue to pass down interesting stories, legends will continue to exist
25 and flourish.

BEOWULF

The Cultural Background

1 Beowulf, a poem of 3,182 lines, is the longest surviving poem in Old English. It is also the first
2 important example of poetry in a European language that is not Greek or Latin, and is the only
3 complete example of Germanic folk epic that exists.

4 A few historical references in Beowulf are from the sixth century, but the version of the poem that 5 we have now was probably composed between 700 and 750. We do not know the name of the 6 author, but it is thought that it was composed by just one person. Like other early poetry, Beowulf
7 was first told orally and passed on from poet to poet over a long time before finally being written
8 down. In Beowulf there are some references to the Anglo-Saxon poet – called Scop (pronounced 9 'shop') in Old English – who gave oral performance of poems, usually by singing them, on special
10 occasions. The first written version of Beowulf is a manuscript* from about 1000, which can now be 11 seen in the British Museum in London.

12 The events of the poem are set in southern Scandinavia, and are mostly a mixture of Germanic myth
13 and legend, although there are a few historical references. The main values of the poem are loyalty
14 to chief and tribe and revenge on enemies, although there are also some comments from a Christian 15 point of view.

16 Beowulf, like nearly all Germanic and Old English poetry, uses alliteration. This means that the 17 sounds of consonants – especially at the beginning of word – are repeated in words that are near 18 each other: e.g. They put his body on the boat and then began to burn it.

19 English poetry only started to use rhyme – in which the last syllables of words have the same sounds
20 – after the Norman invasion of 1066, when French styles of poetry were introduced into England.

Grendel and his mother, the Water Witch, terrorise the community and Hrothgar turns to Beowulf to rid them of the monsters. When Beowulf asks where they live, Hrothgar describes their home in a nearby lake:

- 1 "They live in secret places, windy
- 2 Cliffs, wolf-dens where water pours
- 3 From the rocks, then runs underground where mist
- 4 Streams like black clouds, and the groves of trees
- 5 Growing out over their lake are all covered
- 6 With frozen spray, and wind down snakelike
- 7 Roots that reach as far as the water
- 8 And help keep it dark. At night that lake
- 9 Burns like a torch. No one knows its bottom,
- 10 No wisdom reaches such depths. A deer,
- 11 Hunted through the woods by packs of hounds,
- 12 A stag with great horns, though driven through the forest
- 13 From faraway places, prefers to die
- 14 On those shores, refuses to save its life
- 15 In that water...."

The Setting

Draw the lake where Grendel and his mother live.

Using the text and your drawing, write a description of the lake and Beowulf's journey to fight Grendel's mother.

46 Doubled his strength, he threw her to the floor.
 47 She fell, Grendel's fierce mother, and the Geats'
 48 Proud prince was ready to leap on her. But she rose
 49 At once and repaid him with her clutching claws,
 50 Wildly tearing at him. He was weary, that best
 51 And strongest of soldiers; his feet stumbled
 52 And in an instant she had him down, held helpless.
 53 Squatting with her weight on his stomach, she drew
 54 A dagger, brown with dried blood, and prepared
 55 To avenge her only son. But he was stretched
 56 On his back, and her stabbing blade was blunted
 57 by the woven mail shirt he wore on his chest.
 58 The hammered links held; the point
 59 Could not touch him, he's have travelled to the bottom of the earth,
 60 Edgeth's son, and died there, if that shining
 61 Woven metal had not helped – and Holy
 62 God, who sent him victory, gave judgment
 63 For truth and right, ruler of the heavens,
 64 Once Beowulf was back on his feet and fighting.

65 Then he saw, hanging on the wall, a heavy
 66 Sword, hammered by giants, strong
 67 And blessed with their magic, the best of all weapons
 68 But so massive that no ordinary man could lift
 69 Its carved and decorated length. He drew it
 70 From its scabbard, broke the chain on its hilt,
 71 And then, savage, now, angry
 72 And desperate, lifted it high over his head
 73 And struck with all the strength he had left,
 74 Caught her in the neck and cut it through,
 75 Broke bones and all. Her body fell
 76 To the floor, lifeless, the sword was wet
 77 with her blood, and Beowulf rejoiced at the sight.

The Legend of King Arthur

1 King Arthur was a fictional British leader from the late 5th and early 6th centuries, known as the ruler
2 of Camelot, who has become legendary due to the folklore surrounding his history. King Arthur was
3 described in the History of the Britons by Ninnius in 830 as a British General who fought 12 battles
4 and killed 980 men. This was the beginning of his legend, and no proof exists to support he ever
5 existed in anything other than folklore, although this is still debated by scholars today. King Arthur
6 has become legendary along with the other characters of Camelot including his wife Guinevere, Sir
7 Lancelot, and the Knights of the Round Table.

Interesting King Arthur Facts:

- 9 • King Arthur is a mythological king said to have been the ruler of Britain during the medieval period.
- 10 • King Arthur's parents were Igraine the Duchess of Cornwall, and King Uther Pendragon.
- 11 • King Arthur's nickname was The One, True King of the Britons.
- 12 • The legend of King Arthur contains many variations. His beginnings are fairly similar in most stories,
13 stating that he was born out of wedlock to the King of Britain, and was only able to succeed the throne
14 by proving himself with an unusual demonstration of strength. He pulled a sword from a stone.
- 15 • Some scholars believe that King Arthur's name is derived from a Roman name Astorius, while others
16 believe it is Celtic in origin - derived from the word Art-rig meaning Bear King.
- 17 • The kingdom that King Arthur ruled was called Camelot. The legend of Camelot was not introduced until 18 the end of the 1100s, when a poet DeTroyes added Camelot to the legend.
- 19 • King Arthur married Lady Guinevere but she later betrayed him when she fell in love with Sir Lancelot -
20 King Arthur's first knight. Legend states that she later married Sir Mordred, King Arthur's nephew and a 21 traitor.
- 22 • Legend states that King Arthur kept Sir Lancelot's castle besieged for several months and eventually the 23 two came to an agreement. King Arthur got his wife back and Sir Lancelot had to leave and go to France.
- 24 • King Arthur followed Sir Lancelot to France because he still wanted revenge, and while he was away his 25 nephew Sir Mordred married Queen Guinevere, forcing King Arthur to return.
- 26 • In the battle that followed King Arthur was fatally wounded.
- 27 • Legend states that King Arthur was taken to Avalon by the Three Fairies to cure his wounds. He will be 28 awakened one day to once again defend Britain.
- 29 • King Arthur's sword was called Excalibur.
- 30 • Some believe that King Arthur and Queen Guinevere are buried in Glastonbury Abbey in Glastonbury, 31 England.
- 32 • The Knights of the Round Table lived in King Arthur's castle Camelot. The knights had to uphold a Code 33 of Chivalry, which was a set of rules, in order to be part of the Round Table.
- 34 • The Knights of the Round Table included King Arthur, Lancelot, Gawain, Geraint, Percival, Bors the 35 Younger, Lamorak, Kay, Gareth, Bedivere, Gaheris, Galahad, and Tristan. There are many other knights 36 listed with legends giving different numbers ranging from 12 to more than 150.

The Knights' Code of Chivalry

A knight was expected to have not only the strength and skills to face combat in the Middle Ages but was also expected to temper this aggressive side of a warrior with a chivalrous side to his nature. There was one single Code of Chivalry - it was a moral system which went beyond rules of combat and introduced the concept of "Chivalrous conduct" or the qualities idealized by knighthood, such as bravery, courtesy, honour, and gallantry toward women. The Song of Roland was the most famous 'chanson de geste' (songs of heroic deeds) of the Middle Ages and was composed between 1098- 1100 A.D. It describes the betrayal of Count Roland at the hand of Ganelon (his step-father), and his resulting death in the Pyrenees Mountains at the hands of the Saracens (people who lived in the deserts of the Middle East). Roland was a loyal defender of the king and his code of conduct is a description of the meaning of chivalry:

- To fear God and maintain His Church
- To serve the liege* lord in valour and faith
- To protect the weak and the meek
- To give succour (aid) to widows and orphans
- To refrain from the wanton giving of offence
- To live by honour and for glory
- To despise pecuniary (monetary) reward
- To fight for the welfare of all
- To obey those placed in authority
- To guard the honour of fellow knights
- To eschew (avoid) unfairness, meanness and deceit
- To keep faith
- At all times to speak the truth
- To persevere to the end in any enterprise begun
- To respect the honour of women
- Never to refuse a challenge from an equal
- Never to turn the back upon a foe

*A lord or sovereign to whom allegiance and service are due according to feudal law

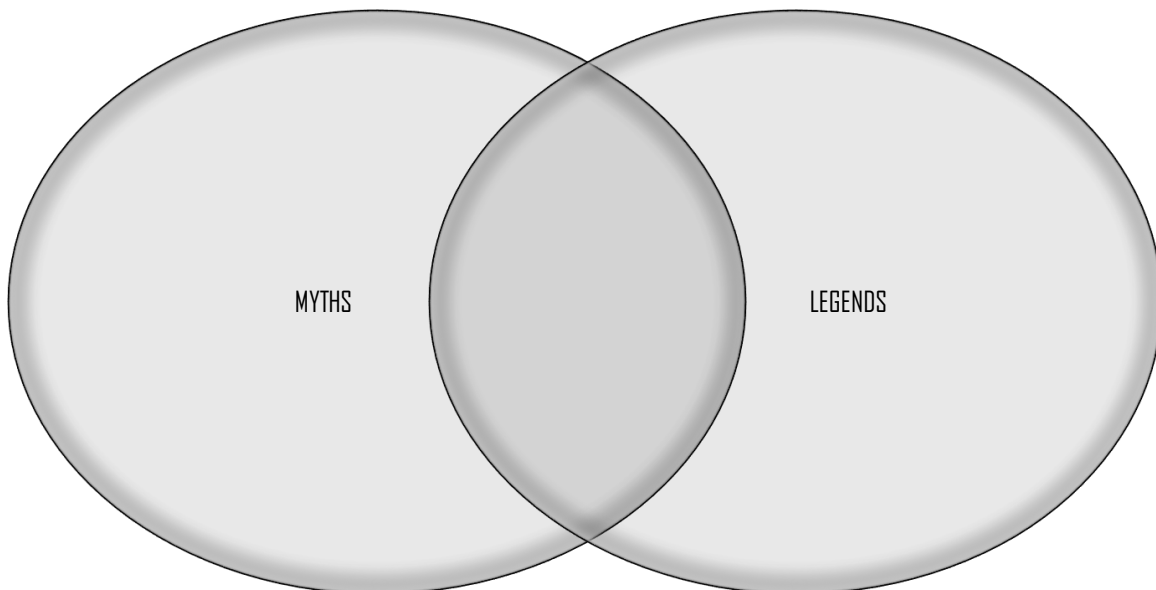

The Code of Chivalry

- Why do you think knights had a code of chivalry?
- Do you think this code of chivalry is still applicable today?
- If you were to write a new code for our day, what would you call it? What would you include in the expectations?

Myth vs Legend

Myth	Legend
A myth is a story from a long time ago. Some myths are thousands of years old. In Greek, the word 'mythos' means 'story'.	Legends are old stories, which have a little bit of truth in them. They might be based on a real event, place, person or a true face from long ago, which got exaggerated over the years
There are myths from every culture in the world, but the best known ones are from Ancient Greece, Rome or from the Norse people of Northern Europe
Myths usually have heroes or heroines who are gods or people with amazing strength or super powers	The heroes and heroines in legends aren't gods, but they are courageous, strong or clever. Sometimes all three!
The hero or heroine often has to go on a journey to outwit or do battle with the frightening beast or monster	Like in myths, legends tell you how a hero or heroine solves a problem or beats the bad guy. Not all legends have monsters or beasts in them.
Gods and monsters are the two main ingredients of many myths	There are often magical people or beasts in legends, such as wizards, witches, fairies, giants, mermaids, dragons or knights – these can be bad or good.
Some myths try to explain how the universe or natural world was created. These are called 'creation myths' or 'nature myths'.

Sir Gawain and the Green Knight

1 Long ago, in a place called Camelot, the great King Arthur was celebrating Christmas. Sharing
2 the King's celebrations were the Knights of the Round Table, the most honourable men in all the
3 lands. They were known far and wide for their bravery and courage. The youngest of these knights
4 was Arthur's own nephew, Sir Gawain.

5 During the feast, as the king raised his cup he wished aloud that they might have some 6 wonderful mystery or adventure. Before he had time to put his cup back on the table, the knights all
7 gasped in astonishment as there rode into the hall the strangest man they had ever seen. The visitor
8 was extremely tall and his face was fierce. His red eyes glowered from beneath great bristly
9 eyebrows and over his broad chest hung a green beard, as big as a bush. His coat, hood and trousers
10 were green as was his horse. In one hand he held a green holly bough and in the other, a huge razor
11 sharp axe. The axe handle was richly decorated in gold and green. The knights were dumbfounded.
12 The king invited the stranger to join them at the table but he replied that he had not come to feast
13 but to prove, once and for all, the courage of the famous knights before him.

14 "If it is battle you seek," replied the king, "I will gladly accept your invitation."

15 "No Sire," said the Green Knight, "I come not to fight but to challenge. I want to know if any 16 man here is bold enough to fetch one blow at me with this axe, on condition that, in a year and a
17 day, he shall stand a blow from my hand." All the knights were silent; no one cared to offer him an 18 exchange of blows. The Green Knight looked scornfully around those assembled. Stung by shame,
19 the King cried out that he would take up the challenge.

20 The Green Knight sprang from his horse and put the axe in Arthur's hand but the Knights
21 pulled him away saying it was no adventure for a king. "Give me the chance," begged Sir Gawain.
22 The young man was keen to help his king. The others backed him and, reluctantly, Arthur 23 withdrew his challenge.

24 "Nephew," said the king, "take care that you put all your heart and strength in the stroke, so
25 he can never repay you." The Green Knight smiled grimly. "It suits me well," he said, "to take a blow
26 from thee, but first you must swear that you will seek me out in twelve months and a day, so I can 27 give back what I received from you." Sir Gawain gave his word and the giant pulled loose his hood
28 and pushed aside his hair to expose his neck. Stroking his great beard he awaited, unconcerned, 29 what was to come.

30 The young man grasped the heavy axe,
31 heaved it high and delivered it with all the strength
32 of his arm. Down came the razor sharp axe on the 33 brawny neck, sheering through skin and bone so the 34 heavy head fell to the floor. But the giant stood firm
35 and, without flinching, picked up his head and 36 sprang on his horse. The king gasped in amazement,
37 the queen screamed and the knights fell into a 38 stunned silence. As he rode from the hall, head in his 39 hands, his eyes fixed themselves on Sir Gawain. "I
40 have thy word," he said. "Do not fail to seek me out;
41 you will find me at the Green Chapel."

42 After a year has passed Sir Gawain went in 43 search of the Green Chapel, he climbed many a hill
44 and crossed many a marsh and river; he battled
45 bears, wolves and serpents but kept travelling. It
46 was a harsh winter and the brave knight often had to 47 sleep in the open, pelted by sleet and rain. He 48 stopped regularly to ask after the Green Knight but 49 none had heard of such a man. Finally, on Christmas

50 Eve, he found himself lost in a great mossy forest. He prayed that he may be guided to a place to 51 rest. As he opened his eyes he saw, in the glow of the setting sun, a noble castle on a distant hill.
52 Spurring on his weary horse, he galloped towards the fortress. The lord of the castle met Sir Gawain
53 with a hearty welcome. Sir Gawain was shown to a beautiful chamber full of rich tapestries. After he 54 had dressed in his best attire, he joined the Christmas gathering. At the table was the lord, his 55 beautiful lady, many knights and dames and, at the far end of the table, sat a wrinkled old crone.

56 For three days he enjoyed the festivities. Then he went to his host to say his farewells. He 57 explained he must be on his way for he needed to find a place known as the Green Chapel. His host, 58 however, assured him it was near at hand. Gawain was pleased to hear his journey was nearly at an 59 end and readily agreed to stay for a further three days.

60 During the next three days, the lady of the castle who had grown to like Sir Gawain offered
61 him her green silk scarf. When he refused, she said, "My knight, you must face many foes. This is a 62 magic scarf; it has the power to protect whoever wears it against any weapon." So he accepted the 63 gift. He spent the rest of the day in the company of the old crone. But he felt uneasy, it was as if her
64 eyes could see right through him. Gawain's heart was heavy, for the time was drawing near when he 65 must leave the castle. He slept ill that night. As the cock's crow heralded the new day, he dressed
66 carefully, taking care to wrap around him the green scarf. He waved goodbye to his host and set out
67 in into the dark stormy morning. A bitter wind took his breath away. A servant had been provided to 68 guide his way. Together they went by rugged cliffs and dark moor.

69 Eventually he came to a crag and saw in front of him the overgrown mouth of a dark cave. He 70 tethered his horse to a tree and went inside. Immediately, there was a fearful clattering of rock and 71 standing in front of the young man was the huge figure of the Green Knight bearing an axe - his hairy
72 head firmly back on his shoulders.

73 "Welcome to my home, you have timed your travels well," said the Green Knight. "Now 74 prepare to make good our bargain." Sir Gawain bravely removed his helmet and bent forward but,
75 as the axe was raised, he could not help but flinch.

76 "Ha," said the Green Knight, "he flinches before he is hurt."

77 "When my head comes off I cannot put it back," said Gawain. "But I gave my word and will 78 not flinch again."

79 Once more the giant brandished the axe.

80 "Strike and be done," said Gawain.

81 "Have patience," jeered the Giant and he heaved the heavy axe up into the air. This time the 82 knight did not flinch or cry out as the sharp axe whistled through the air and onto his neck splitting 83 the skin.

84 It was a few moments before a stunned Gawain realised that, apart from a few drops blood, 85 he was unharmed. He turned to see, leaning on his axe, not the Green Knight but the Lord of the 86 Castle.

87 "My brave knight, I came to see if you were a man of your word. The cut on your neck is for 88 the scarf that you took but did not tell me about". Sir Gawain stood confused by his own weakness
89 and the generosity of his host. Unfastening the scarf, he offered it to his host.

90 "Keep the scarf," said the Knight, "as a token of this adventure. The debt is cleared."

91 The knight introduced himself as Sir Berblake. "Morgan le Fay, your own aunt, gave me with 92 the magic charms to challenge Arthur's court," he said. "She was disguised as the old crone you saw."
93 He bid Gawain return to the castle to get better acquainted with his aunt but Gawain politely refused,
94 he had experienced enough magic for the moment. He made his way home and was greeted with 95 great joy. The scar on his neck remained as the only evidence of his adventure.

96 As for the lady's green scarf, he wore it as a reminder, should he ever get too proud, of his faint
97 heartedness. And all the knights agreed, for Gawain's sake, to wear also a green belt as, even the 98 bravest man alive, they felt, would have shrunk from such a fate.
